Abstract: Nǀuu is one of the most endangered languages in South Africa. Today, three elderly sisters, all residing in the vicinity of Upington (Northern Cape province, South Africa), are the last fluent speakers of Nǀuu. Hanna Koper is the oldest among them, followed by Griet Seekoei, and Katrina Esau, also known as “Ouma Geelmeid”, is the youngest (aged 83). Ouma Geelmeid and her granddaughter, Claudia du Plessis, have been engaged in teaching Nǀuu to children of the ǂKhomani community for the last 10 years. Since 2012, the Centre for African Language Diversity (CALDi) at the University of Cape Town has been supporting these teaching efforts through the establishment of a practical Nǀuu orthography and the development of educational materials. Alphabet charts, posters and a Nǀuu reader are outcomes of the joint efforts between members of the ǂKhomani community and CALDi scholars. The presentation reviews achievements and challenges in the collaboration between community members and CALDi scholars in their efforts to revitalize the Nǀuu language and discusses how the educational materials are currently being used at Ouma Geelmeid’s school.
